Becoming Healthy

Before working the steps with a sponsor in Al-Anon, I did not trust myself or life's process. I felt anxious about everything because I had no confidence in myself or that things would work out. I listened to and trusted whomever I turned over my power, even if their views went against everything I knew in my heart, because I wanted someone else to take care of me. When things didn't work out, I felt victimized because I trusted that person more than I trusted myself. I looked at the parts I liked instead of confronting the whole reality.

Through working the steps in Al-Anon, I learned to trust myself by building a self that could be trusted. I gained the capacity to trust life's process to a level unimaginable to me in my former life. Having non-traditional spiritual beliefs, I was hesitant to let go of my tight grasp on figuring things out and making things happen. But I desperately needed to live differently and so I became willing to try. I recognized that I do not have to have traditional religious beliefs in order to be more trusting of life's process.

I also began journaling and meditating. Journaling about my path in Al-Anon helped me identify where I was and where I wanted to be. Meditation helped me pause, relax, and detach from the situations I faced so I could reflect and let go when I wanted to control the outcomes. I still journal and meditate. Sometimes I return to those early journals and it becomes clear how far I have come; how much more healthy I have become.

Today I am a lot better at letting go and allowing myself to discover what will be. I learned to stand on my own two feet and confront the parts I don't agree with. I've stopped giving my denial the power to hurt me and I don't feel like a victim. My life is more manageable because I acknowledge the full truth.

Highlight on CAL

This column is set aside for exploring our vast collection of literature. This issue's focus is on Hope for Today.

I always prided myself on being in control of my faculties. So it came as quite a shock when I realized that I used the buzz of busyness the same way my alcoholic relatives used the buzz of alcohol – to anesthetize myself and to isolate. I was always filling every minute with the noise of "important" activity. My life was one big, busy evasion.

I wasn't exactly a workaholic, but at various times I was a learn-aholic and an achieve-aholic, all the while never focusing on my relationship with my Higher Power, with others, and with myself. Fortunately, an Al-Anon friend reminded me that who I am, not what I do, makes me worthwhile. Now, I'm keeping the focus on me – my thoughts, feelings, motives, and attitudes. When I keep these parts of myself on track, my activity becomes a reflection of, rather than a running away from, a healthy self. Today, I can quiet myself to listen for God's whispers and hear my heart's own spontaneous response.

A Seed Planted

I knew about Al-Anon for two years before I went to my first meeting. When I was married to my first husband, I was working as a hairdresser two days a week. At least one of those days each week, I would cry at work because of some crisis that happened because of my husband's drinking. The guy I worked for knew about Al-Anon. Every week he told me, "You really need to go to Al-Anon. It would help you."

Finally, something happened, and I was so overwhelmed I got the phone book and called Al-Anon for meeting days and times. I went to my first Al-Anon meeting that day, May 14, 1980. So you see, sometimes it takes that seed that's been planted a long time to be ready to grow. Like an alcoholic, I had to reach my bottom and get desperate enough to want recovery.

There is no doubt in my mind that God led me to that particular shop to work with that man. If Ervin had not planted that seed and kept reminding me about Al-Anon, I might not be alive today. I am forever grateful.

God allowed me to be miserable and desperate enough to want Al-Anon. Pain is what got me to Al-Anon and wanting to maintain my serenity is the reason I stay. Al-Anon has helped me in every area of my life. Every gift I have received from God and Al-Anon are gifts that all the money in the world could not have bought.

Over the years, thousands of tiny seeds have been planted in my Al-Anon garden and I have had beautiful gardens along the way.

A Family of Strangers

I find it so very difficult to keep myself emotionally available in situations where conflict may arise. During my childhood, conflict meant my physical and emotional wellbeing was at risk, and my only escape was withdrawal. As the youngest and the smallest, withdrawal meant running away, finding a small place to hide where those who might pursue me either could not follow or whose anger would have worn out by the time they reached me.

Unfortunately, this life-long habit of withdrawal has also meant isolating myself to feel safe. Now as an adult, the God of my understanding places me in situations where I can learn new skills. Although I often find it uncomfortable, I am slowly beginning to recognize and understand that conflict does not mean risk, it is simply a difference of opinion. Through Al-Anon service, I have been given an opportunity to observe others express their thoughts and feelings while others who may not agree listen in a respectful way.

Although I am now well over a half-century old, when I see this behavior, it always surprises me. In my head and heart, I know it is my Higher Power showing me I can choose a different way to live, that I don't have to be afraid, no one means me ill will, and I don't have to withdraw. I don't have to keep picking up the old tools of my family of origin, I have the opportunity to pick up and use new tools, the tools I am learning through a new family, a family of people who were once strangers, my family of Al-Anon.
